VISION INSPIRED BELASCO TO WRITE 'PETER GRIM' PLAY

Night His Mother Died He Dreamed He Saw Her Face and Heard Message.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. L.-In describlog his new play. "The return of Peter Grim," which was opened here last night with David Warfield as star. David Belasco sald to-day that he was inspired to write the drama by a vision when his mother died. He said:

When my mother died five years ago I had not seen her for some time. I was kept here in the East by ms offairs, but I knew she had been in poor health. One night-sire night she died-I suddenly was awakened as though some one had touched me, and there above me I saw to the darkness my mother's face. I heard her whisper: Davie, Davie, I want to see you again. Davis, Davis, I wanted to say goodby, and she slowly disappeared. "I received a releasem near morning telling me of her death. So had died at the very minima are appeared to me in the wisten.

The thought of this remained in my

The thought of this remained in my mind. Two years later I was aroused into activity when Could Demille came to me in New York with what he thought was a good ifea for a play. The how was the one I had note in mind as loan a soot my mother. Then I have it the initial idea from Demilie and set to work.

and set to words.
"I have worked nursing, noon and right on that play. I chose a man to represent the return to Hr, as I thought it would make the play stronger than if the character was a woman. That is the voy 'The Return of Peter G.im' originated."
